DYNAMITERS PARDONED

MOTHER TO HELP GUNMAN

were added to the long list of those involved in the sensational career of "Diamond Chip" Robinson, Beau Brummel bandit and wooer of many loston girls, who is under indictment for shooting and killing Police Inspector Thomas J. Norton. The last two women to appear are Robinson's wife and his mother.

News that Robinson "is a married man will come as a great surprise to the Boston girls of his acquaintance, who believed him to be a bachelor looking for a handsome bride."

Robinson was at his wife's side as she left the sanitarium in Cincinnati less than seven weeks ago. She was Miss Dora Hard. He married her fourteen years ago in his native city of Washington, Ohio, just before he entered on his career of petty crimes in the wake of circeuses.

state of health, probably near death, owing to tuberculosis.

Mrs. Jennie Robinson, the slayer's mother, is travelling representative of a New York firm. It is reported today that she is coming to Boston with a "diamond chip."

"Diamond Chip" Robinson's life in Boston was just "one girl after another," according to police investigators. His fancy turned hither and thither, and he wooed with impartiality. But of all the girl acquaintances he had so far as the police can find—he found none who would accept him.

How many girls Robinson met in Boston can only be guessed. Several of them have been found—seven who became acquainted with him. Besides these there are many others who are

ZAGATEAS CAPTURED BY REBELS

WASHINGTON, June 24.—The State Department received a report today that Zagarzas was captured by General Villa's troops on June 19, and that the Federal troops under General Barron have been ordered to attack Zagarzas.

The report further states that General Zagarzas is being held at the residence of the consul general in Mexico City, and as soon as additional reinforcements reach the city from General Villa he will begin the attack.

A report to the department from General Miller at Tampico states that Constitutional commander General Lugo has captured a large part of the ammunition carried by the German ship Ypiranga for General Huerta.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—It was reported at the White House today that President Wilson has received a cablegram dated from President Huerta. It was rumored that the dispatch carried a request that the mediation proceedings at Niagara Falls be expedited.

ENVOYS MEET TODAY IN EFFORT TO STOP COLLAPSE OF PEACE

By LAURENCE TODD, Staff Correspondent of the American.

MEDIATION HEADQUARTERS, Niagara Falls, Ont., June 24.—In a small separate office in the center of a large building, the envoys of the United States and Mexico are today in conference with the American and Mexican delegates. It will be held late this afternoon. It is understood that at this conference the delegates will be given the latest reply sent by General Carranza to the mediators' efforts in their attempt to effect peace in Mexico. The reply is said to be a refusal to consider a truce or discuss internal affairs and to be a characteristically offensive to the United States.

News reached the A-B-C mediators during the night that the refusal of Carranza to consider an armistice and the announcement that General Villa's great army will push on to Mexico City as fast as possible. With the overthrow of the Huerta government in sight the mediators take this means of bringing matters to a swift climax.

CARRANZA PAPERS NOW CALL VILLA TRAITOR TO REBELS

By M. H. STANSBURY, Special Correspondent of the Boston American.

MONTREAL, Que., June 23.—The Canadian newspapers are now calling Villa a traitor. They say he has been almost deified as the "Hero of Mexico" and the sudden change of front is significant. One paper says: "President Wilson, because of diplomatic pressure, ends with abandoning his power in Mexico in the hands of Francisco Villa, a person morally incriminated for realizing the great program of justice, the revolution in the motto of 'Morality not expediency' will have moved down the slope of the most lamentable disillusion because President Wilson will have taken the power from the hands of one traitor, usurper and assassin and placed it in the hands of another traitor, usurper and assassin."

If this scathing criticism of Villa does not have the approval of Carranza it is not being suppressed by him.

Deciphers Story of the Deluge

LONDON, June 24.—Professor Stephen Langdon, who holds the chair of astronomy at Jesus College, Oxford, has deciphered the Nimrod Babylonian tablets belonging to the University of Pennsylvania, of which he is professor while in Philadelphia last year. The tablets give pre-diluvian accounts of the fall of man and the deluge. The latter, he says, is clearly the original story preserved in the Book of Genesis.

Peter of Serbia Abdicates Throne for Second Son

BELGRADE, June 24.—Peter I, who ascended the throne of Serbia in 1903 after the assassination of King Alexander, abdicated today in favor of the Crown Prince, Alexander. The royal proclamation that will be issued announcing the abdication of King Peter will state that his retirement is due to continued ill health. Prince Alexander, who succeeds to the throne, is twenty-six years old, and the second son of the present king. Prince George, the elder son, renounced his right of succession in 1909. King Peter is seventy years old, he having been born in June, 1844.

Harvard Beat Yale, According to Film

Moving pictures of the Harvard-Yale boat race, taken from alongside the judge's stand, show that the Harvard crew won by two feet, according to the assertion today of men who have seen the film displayed. Coach James Wray of the Harvard crew, who has privately contended all along that his men won, is said to have been so sure of the result that he announced Yale's victory by one foot.

Chase Deer Through Streets of Atlantic

A crowd of citizens chasing a deer through the streets furnished some excitement in Atlantic today. The deer jumped over a five-foot fence into the backyard of Carl Marble on East Nineteenth street, tearing down part of the fence in making its escape. A crowd of citizens collected and chased the deer until it disappeared into a time-honored old yard. The deer was fully grown and persons who saw it believe that it escaped from some park.

STAMFORD MAN SLAIN; WEALTHY DIVORCEE WELLS

Police Brennan had not closed an eye since the tragedy.

After the most anxious and hysterical he had told many conflicting stories. Finally she said word that she would tell the truth and was anxious to appear before Coroner Phelan to do so.

The story she told and the story she said she would repeat to Coroner Phelan this afternoon was in substance that she had been drinking and when he left my apartment he was under the influence of liquor. He stumbled down stairs. I heard him fall and I ran out to his aid at the bottom of the stairs and I hurried him up. I found him lying on the floor. He did not answer. He seemed to be dead. Blood was trickling from his ear.

"I was in a panic. I did not know what to do. I thought to notify the police, and then it flashed into my mind that I might be compromising myself. I dreaded the publicity that I knew would follow."

"CARRIED HIM OUT."

"Something wanted to impel me to pick up Wells and carry him out on the sidewalk. I dropped him on the sidewalk and ran back, locking the door behind me."

"I was in a panic. I did not know what to do. I thought to notify the police, and then it flashed into my mind that I might be compromising myself. I dreaded the publicity that I knew would follow."

Bullen is assistant superintendent of the Yale Lock factory and is well known in the community. Mrs. Wells is a handsome woman of forty, who divorced her husband about five years ago.

News of the tragedy caused a sensation in the community. The several police officers in front of the apartment house were crowded by curious spectators from every direction. The natural curiosity which was aroused by the sensational and mysterious details of the tragedy was a great help.

Knights Templar at Nantasket Today

Seven commanderies of Knights Templar visited Nantasket today to observe St. John's day. With their hands they paraded to the shore to take the steamer for Nantasket and stop several hours to have dinner, witness sports and fireworks.

was heightened by the prominence of the participants.

For some time a young woman artist, who came here from New York City has been living with Mrs. Angie. One of the members of the apartment was John A. Ballou, who found the body of Ballou, did not recognize the Councilman at first.

McMahon, "but when I saw that I should have lying all crumpled up I tried to arouse him by giving him a little kick, but got no response. Then I bent over and saw that he was dead. The fact was missing and he was dead. I was in a panic. I did not know what to do. I thought to notify the police, and then it flashed into my mind that I might be compromising myself. I dreaded the publicity that I knew would follow."

McMahon was expected to be the star witness at the inquest which Coroner Phelan set for today. Judge Finley Finley, a leader of the local bar, was summoned by Judge Angie early in the forenoon and hurried at once to her cell there. They held a long conference.

Mrs. Angie was calm when first arrested, but when she realized the seriousness of the charge brought against her and went hysterically, meanwhile crying out: "I did not kill him!"

Mrs. Angie sent a telegram to her father, who has been spending the season at his summer residence near Portland, Maine, and he is expected to arrive here tonight to help look after his daughter's case. He is a wealthy retired merchant.

Ballou was a sixty-year-old widow, was a warm personal friend of Mrs. Angie's father and had formerly associated in business deals.

According to friends, Ballou's arrival at Mrs. Angie's apartment was a considerable period and he was a frequent visitor at her apartment. They often attended social functions together and he was frequently invited to dine at her home.

Ballou was a member of the Old Fellows, the Suburban Club, and several other organizations. He was a director in the Vermont State Mutual Life Insurance Co. and was a Republican leader.

Robinson's 'Pal' Confesses; Glieves Black Hand Clew

GRAND RAPIDS, June 24.—Vogler Lawrence, who confessed that he was "Chippy" Robinson's pal in the Thompson triple murder case, here, gave Sheriff O'Donnell the name of a man who Lawrence says should be charged with the murder of the Black Hand postcard received by the Boston police, threatening the officers with death because of the arrest of Robinson.

Lawrence asked that the name be sent by wire to Superintendent Pierce of Boston.

The bullets found in the bodies of the Thompson murder victims have been weighed and five of them found the same weight. These, it is believed, were fired by Robinson. One of a similar caliber and this is taken to support the theory of Lawrence's confession.

SEEK WRAPPER IN SLAYING OF MAINE GIRL

CARIBOU, Me., June 24.—County officers are trying to find Allen Boulter, a young trapper, to learn what he knows, if anything, regarding the slaying of Miss Emma Jensen, an eighteen-year-old girl who was found shot to death in a clump of bushes on New Sweden road.

Boulter, who is twenty-two, is reported to be on his way to Canada. The slain girl was the daughter of Jacob Jensen, a prosperous farmer, who lives about three miles from Caribou on the New Sweden road. She was one of the belles of the countryside and the tragedy has caused a sensation. The girl was shot twice in the head and her body dragged into the bushes and abandoned.

Corner Floyd A. Smith, of Presque Isle, is handling the investigation and Medical Examiner S. W. Boone performed an autopsy upon the body today.

Miss Jensen came to Caribou from the Jensen farm to see a dress which was playing there while in town as she was in the company of a man who was connected with the circus. They were trailed by a man who is suspected of the slaying.

The girl is believed to have been driven from Caribou while on her way home from the circus. The authorities are convinced that the man who followed her to the bushes and then by making a doctor, handed her off. It is thought he hid in the bushes close to the girl's car, as the girl passed, fired twice.

Miss Jensen probably died instantly. Both bullets took effect in her head and either would have proved fatal. The slayer is then believed to have dragged the girl's body into the bushes and left it partially concealed by bushes and underbrush.

The place where the shooting occurred is only a short distance from Miss Jensen's home. A turn of the white dress led to the finding of the body by Frank Jensen, a farmer neighbor of the Jensens. Brown was on his way to his farm when he noticed the piece of cloth in the roadways. Near it was a trail of blood leading towards the bushes. He followed the trail and came upon the body.

Brown notified the county authorities and an investigation was started. The body of the girl was taken in charge by Medical Examiner Boone and Corner Smith called a jury to sit on the case today.

According to the police, Boulter told his brother he had "shot a circus man down the road and that Emma was with him." The police also say Boulter told his brother the place where Miss Jensen's body was hidden, but asked him not to inform their parents.

The fate of the circus man is not known. The police have been unable to learn whether he started home with Miss Jensen or remained in town and allowed her to make the trip home alone. It is thought that if he accompanied the girl he may have also been slain and his body hidden.

McGill, the million dollar heiress, took the stand in her own behalf in Supreme Court in Mrs. Walter L. Mayer's action for $50,000 damages against her for alienation of her husband's affections. Mrs. Mayer is the wife of Miss McGill's chauffeur.

The day was marked with surprises for both sides. Mayer, who testified earlier in the day, denied he had been over friendly with his pretty employee. Miss McGill's youthful appearance, her blue eyes and baby voice proved a surprise of strength when she went to the stand. She scoffed at the idea that she had ever treated Mayer in any manner other than in the relation of an employer to an employee. Mayer, she said, had always shown the utmost respect for her.

NEARLY A MILLION.

Miss McGill said she was born in 1885, and received $400,000 at the death of her father, Dr. John J. McGill, president of the Hudson National Bank and surgeon-general of the New Jersey State.

"The only time Mayer entered my room was when he brought me news of my father's death," she said. "I was then in my room and he came in to tell me that my father had died."

"One of my former maid testified that she saw me, dressed in a night gown in Mayer's room early one morning."

"She lied," said Miss McGill, jumping to her feet. "I was never in Mayer's room and had I gone there I would not have allowed the servant to see me."

Soon after the death of Dr. McGill the defendant lived alone, except for an occasional visit from her aunt and cousin, with Mayer in the family home at No. 18 Clifford avenue, Jersey City. She did so, she said, because she had difficulty in finding servants.

COULD GET SERVANTS.

"I did not go to it because of your liaison with Mayer," shouted Robert Brown, of the plaintiff's counsel. "I did it because I did not know how to get servants."

Mayer's ability to make coffee and toast and his having taken them alone to the defendant's room were brought after repeated questions on the part of Mr. Brown.

A suit of white pajamas which the servants said belonged to Mayer and which are alleged to have been found in Miss McGill's room were said by Miss McGill to be her father's. Counsel said they would fit him.

The outcome of the case practically hinges on the testimony of a former housekeeper of the McGills, who may see the stand today. It is generally believed the case will go to the jury late this afternoon.

HERE'S WHERE I THROW PROFIT TO THE WIND MY GREATEST JULY CLEARANCE SALE

—Wm. Sheinwald.

Begins Tomorrow Morning—3 weeks earlier than usual—in order to take care of extraordinary stock conditions at this store.

On account of the backward season and also because I have made mammoth purchases late in the season to secure remarkable price concessions—I am now heavily overstocked and must begin reducing at once.

For example, I bought 15,000 pairs of Children's Elk Sole Play Shoes from Elit Kaufman, New York City, at about one-half regular prices—I bought 100 cases of Women's White Canvas Rubber Sole Oxfords from a big Boston shoe house—I bought 24,000 pairs of Men's Shoes from the largest manufacturer in Boston. Any one of these purchases would be far beyond the reach of any other shoe retailer in the country, and of course I got them at a great reducing in price.

I want to clean up these purchases immediately and beginning tomorrow morning I make

Congressman Murray Has Proved That "Honesty Is the Best Policy," Even in Politics

Those who know Congressman Murray will appreciate how wisely among the Massachusetts congressional delegation he has been selected for the office of Postmaster of Boston.

The AMERICAN did all it could to help Mr. Murray receive his first election to the National Legislature, and the AMERICAN has had no reason to regret it.

During the present session of Congress Mr. Murray distinguished himself as a man of judgment, independence and self-respect. He had known that the postmastership was his for the asking, yet when President Wilson asked him to violate his party platform, to throw away one of the great advantages sought for American commerce in the Panama Canal, to surrender our control over a canal which we have built by stupendous expenditure of daring, brains and treasure, to humiliate our country before England, in order to please the Canadian Pacific and the American transcontinental railroads and to give a timorous administration a chance to palter and potter a few months longer in Mexico, Mr. Murray remained loyal to his party's plighted honor and loyal to his country's interests and self-respect. He stood up like a man against the power of patronage and voted to permit American ships to pass through our American canal free of toll charges.

Mr. Murray had the manly intelligence to appreciate that the President would not dare to take the proffered position from him for voting like an American and a Democrat and he had the courage and self-respect to take the chance, anyway.

What a contrast between this upstanding man and the abject Gilmore of Brockton. This Edward C. Gilmore went groveling for a job as soon as he came within smelling distance of the patronage trough. He came to heel at the call of the keeper of the trough immediately, throwing overboard his party platform and his country's rights and interests in the Panama Canal. Now, Mr. Murray has received the largest postoffice job in New England while Gilmore is still groveling for a very little job in Brockton.

We do not know what Congressmen Peters and Thacher expect from the present administration, but we shall watch the outcome with interest.

In the meantime, we commend the example of Mr. Murray to Congressmen Gilmore, Thacher and Peters as evidence that political "honesty is the best policy" often enough to make it worth trying occasionally.

How to Make "Lofty Sentiment" Real

You Might Begin by Doing Something for Somebody Else That Helps

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

A gentleman who says "pardon pencil"—we pardon it willingly—writes this interesting and ingenious note:

Editor Boston AMERICAN:
Dear Sir—I was just thinking of those thousands of men and women whose ideals and ambitions soar skyward, but who have no definite knowledge of the way to make a firm start toward making actions out of those lofty sentiments. So the start is seldom made. Can you show us the way?

WILL J. LEE.

This letter probably expresses the thought of many citizens, some of them more and some of them less sophisticated than Mr. Lee, who writes:

In every brain there is a desire to do something, to BE something, AND APART FROM SELFISHNESS.

Many have "ideals and ambitions that soar skyward" and wonder why deeds cannot accompany the thought. This gentleman would oblige millions if he could supply to all "knowledge of the way to make a firm start toward making actions out of those lofty sentiments."

For the comfort of those who have lofty sentiments and don't know what to do about it, or who feel inclined to laugh at themselves, we say this:

All of the great men and women in history were at one time wishful, sad individuals, full of "ambitions that soar skyward" and with no apparent hope of realizing the ambitions.

But they did get the work done, they did get their little part of their line in history, and you may do the same.

Each man must mark out his own road and follow it. Every one can make at once the best possible start in the way of "soaring skyward" BY DOING SOMETHING FOR SOMEBODY ELSE. This is not, good friends, "mushy sentimentality," but practical advice.

Nothing develops a man, a woman or a child more than doing something for mother.

When you help others you realize how much need there is of help, and you feel more strongly your duty to make the best of yourself.

If you pick up a crying child, wipe his nose, ask him what is the matter with him, and perhaps give him a penny with wise advice to contact the so much dreaded "pauperizing" you make yourself better.

If you carry a big bundle for some old woman, help a mother with one of the children, or take the trouble to set some erring individual right, you are making yourself a great deal better—and you are getting ready to "soar skyward."

Of course, merely doing something for somebody else in a small way does not gratify the full ambition of the gentleman who has been reading about Napoleon, but if this world were made up entirely of individuals, each anxious to do something FOR SOME ONE OTHER PERSON, we wouldn't need the great men and the great women—their work would be done.

After all, the "great" human being is only he who has helped others—whether it be as a statesman, a warrior, a writer, a scientist, or a religious teacher.

To be a great man on a great scale, begin by being a useful man on a little scale—then you can gradually work upward.

Intervention by U. S. Urged by Army and Navy Journal

THE Army and Navy Journal says editorially in its issue of June 24:

"We hear from Vera Cruz that the attitude of hostility of the Mexican army in front of our small force in Vera Cruz is not to be ignored; that constant attempts are made to cut our lines of communication, the attention being one only in name; our airplanes being fired at, etc. But no recruits or material of war are allowed by our government to be taken to Vera Cruz, in spite of the fact that the average strength of our companies of infantry there is not much more than forty men.

"The occupation of Vera Cruz was supposed by most military onlookers to have been largely designed to prevent a shipment of arms to Mexico City; that the other ports of that republic, very few in number, would be blockaded. The country was supposed to hear later that the very shipment of arms which was intercepted at Vera Cruz had been allowed to land at Puerto Mexico, together with other numerous invasions of ammunition and military supplies to that and other points.

"In spite of the fact that the Carranzistas in mass of hostility are likely to turn against us, we have threatened to fight rather than allow the Mexican republic to prevent military supplies being delivered to the Carranzistas at Tampico.

"Following the nomenclature of our 'Army of Intervention' in 1913, and our 'Army of Cuban Pacification' in 1907, the Vera Cruz force has been rightly dubbed the 'Army of Mexican Exasperation.' It is said that Vera Cruz is to be held as a guarantee with which to bring the Mexicans to terms. Our people forget that in 1914 we tried to get the Mexicans to treat after the capture of Matamoros, after the battle of Monterrey, after the capture of Puebla, and finally after the battle of Contreras and Churubusco, when the American army had arrived at the gates of Mexico City. The Mexicans were then always ready to treat, because by this means they gained time and were able to fortify, to reinforce their armies, to manufacture and import ammunition and guns, and to make preparation for an obstinate resistance.

"The intervention of the United States in Mexico would not be a 'war.' It would be an act of humanity. It would be the use of a 'police force' to stop murder and robbery. It can be justified as being a duty we owe to the world.

"It behooves us to consider at the present moment whether we can endure the present situation much longer without being open in the face of a challenge in the country. A couple truly in love are much happier than many inmates of the workhouses from up on the avenue. Though they are much happier than many inmates of the workhouses from up on the avenue, they are not so happy as a couple truly in love.

"That night, when Tom came home from work, he found Jennie sitting in a chair looking out of the window. She had not even started supper or lit the light. Tom appeared not to notice, but said: 'Look, Jennie, here's something I brought you and thought you might like it.' It was a box of candy. When Jennie saw it she said to Tom, 'Why did you buy it?' 'You are always talking about saving money, and here you go and bring home a punk box of candy that I don't want. 'I know we can't afford it, Jennie, but I just got it for you anyway. For I thought you might like it.' 'Well, I don't care anything about it one way or the other,' said Jennie.

At this, Tom lost his temper for the first time when they were married, and went out, slamming the front door—B. C.

Official Husbands—"What a Business or Professional Woman Needs Is Not a Husband, but a Nice Wife Who Will Make Her a Comfortable Home and Pet and Coddle Her After Her Hard Day's Work Is Done."

By DOROTHY DIX

"NOTICE," said the successful business woman, "that Commissioner Katherine M. Davis of New York says that what she needs most is an official husband to represent her at public dinners and lunches, as the wives of the Mayor and District Attorney charmingly represent them at such functions while they are in their offices doing their work."

"My experience is that what a business or professional woman needs most is not a husband, but a nice wife who will make her a comfortable home, and pet and coddle her up after her hard day's work is done, as a good wife does her husband. Personally, my greatest regret in life is that I can never marry a woman, and possess this sort of a domestic treasure."

"When I go home of an evening, after my hard day's work, I'd like to find my slippers waiting on the radiator, and my soft warm dressing gown hanging ready for me to put on, and just the things that I like best for dinner waiting to be put on the table. It would soothe and comfort me beyond all telling to be coaxed over and petted and flattered and made to feel that I was a great big, strong, noble creature that somebody looked up to, and these things would be the pleasant reward of my labor if I were a man."

"But the woman worker never gets them. If she has a home, she not only has to earn the money to support it, but to make it home itself afterward. If she has her favorite dishes for dinner it is because she has seen to it before she keeps before she went off to work in the morning."

"If her slippers are waiting on the radiator it is because she has carefully dried a maid into putting them there; and just because busy women are too busy to look after these details they are not attended to at all, and the business woman sits what is no before she digs her own end slippers out of the closet."

"Think that the tragedy of the business woman consists in this: that when she assumes the work of a man she merely adds it on to the ordinary labor of woman—washing, perhaps, explains why more women do not succeed, and why so many break down in midcareer. They are playing the game, both ends against the middle. How could they win out under such a system?"

"If the professional woman marries, she merely acquires a new burden, because the one thing above everything else that a man means to a man is physical comfort. Somebody to sew on the buttons, and darn the socks, and keep track of the laundry, and order his dinner, in what he expects in exchange for giving up his personal liberty, and for what she expects her to do these things for him."

"And there you are," said the business woman with a sigh. "Marrying a business woman, help the professional woman to acquire a nice, comfortable home, with somebody to sew on the buttons, and darn the socks, and keep track of the laundry, and order his dinner, in what he expects in exchange for giving up his personal liberty, and for what she expects her to do these things for him."

"And there you are," said the business woman with a sigh.
